Work Experience of Internship

During my time as a Newsroom Editor in the Multimedia Department of Rupali Bangladesh, I worked on many types of news stories. I wrote National and International news, and I also prepared reports based on information sent by our correspondents from different parts of the country. I checked every piece of information carefully to make sure the news was accurate and ready to publish on time.

Working in the multimedia newsroom also helped me improve my voice presentation. By giving regular news voice-overs, I was able to develop better pronunciation, tone and clarity, which made my voice sound more confident and smooth.

Overall, this experience helped me learn how to work under pressure, manage time well, and grow as a skilled multimedia journalist.

Special Experiences

Working on in-depth or specialized reporting was one of the foremost interesting experiences I had whereas working as a Newsroom Editor at the Daily Rupali Bangladesh. This required going in-depth and advertising careful scope on a variety of subjects, counting social issues and noteworthy current subjects. I got the chance to work with senior journalists and carry out a lot of thought about forming beyond any doubt the piece were in-depth and point of view. Solid subject-matter information and an intense eye for detail were essential for this kind of detailing. It empowered me to hone my describing capacities and have a more noteworthy understanding of a variety of subjects. This was an especially fulfilling involvement for me since it permitted me to make amazing, instructive substance that made an impression on our viewers.

Tools and Technologies Used

All through my internship at Daily Rupali Bangladesh, I obtained profitable devices and innovative competencies.

The Base Station: I worked on my assignments at a cozy, compact desktop computer workstation. The office had advertised Wi-Fi and the computer had the most current program, so surfing the web was simple and hassle-free.

For making content: As a Newsroom Editor, I worked with a range of tools and technologies that helped streamline the entire news production process. For drafting and editing reports, I primarily used Microsoft Word, which allowed me to maintain clarity, accuracy, and proper formatting in every piece of content. I also used Google Docs to organize, compile, and manage all news articles in a structured and collaborative way. This made it easier to update information in real time and keep every document well-organized.

In addition to these core writing tools, I regularly worked with various newsroom management platform, cloud-based storage system, and multimedia applications. These tools supported task such as headline creation, script polishing, voice-over preparation and coordinating content for digital publication. Together, these technologies played a vital role in enhancing workflow efficiency and enabling me to deliver high-quality editorial output consistently.

CHAPTER FOUR

EVALUATION OF LEARNING

Difference between Academic and Practical Work

Learning in a classroom and learning in a real newsroom are never the same. Through my internship, I realized that journalism needs both theory and practical experience. Only knowing the textbook rules is not enough you have to work with real news truly understand the field. These two form of learning complete each other.

As a student of Journalism, Media, and Communication, I gained a lot of academic knowledge over the last four years. but there is a big difference between university learning and professional newsroom work. In university, we usually get enough time to finish assignments, presentations, or reports. But in the newsroom, time is everything. News moves very fast, so understanding the importance of real-time information is essential.

During academic life, we often faced a lack of equipment or hands-on practice. But in a professional newsroom, I found that all the important tools, software, and technical support are easily available. Even expert opinions which were sometimes difficult to get during university work become much easier to collect because we regularly communicate with reporters, correspondents, and specialists.

Still, there are some similarities. In both places, we follow the same journalistic methods: collecting information, using the 5W 1H questions, writing news with the inverted pyramid structure, preparing reports, and following journalistic ethics and guidelines. The core style of news writing remains the same only the environment and responsibilities change.

Working as a Newsroom Editor helped me understand that my academic learning created a strong foundation, and the newsroom experience made me confident and skilled. together, they shaped me into a better and more professional journalist.

Internship Outcome

My internship at Daily Rupali Bangladesh was a very valuable and practical learning experience for me. Working in the newsroom helped me improve my news writing and voice skills through real-life tasks. I learned how to write news carefully by focusing on accuracy, clarity, and proper news style. BY working closely with senior Journalist, I developed better communication and teamwork skills. I was also involved in fact-checking, which helped me understand the importance of honesty and responsibility in journalism. During my internship, I used many tools for my news content. This experience taught me how to manage time properly and work confidently under pressure. Overall, my internship at Rupali Bangladesh prepared me well for a future career in news writing, good voice over and professional journalism.

Expectation and Experience

Before starting my academic journey in journalism media and communication my understanding of the field was not very clear. However, I always wanted to become a journalist. When I applied for my internship at Daily Rupali Bangladesh, I felt nervous but excited. I used to read and listening online news and also daily newspapers regularly, which increased my interest in newsroom work.

Working as a newsroom editor at Rupali Bangladesh helped me understand the real responsibilities of journalism. Writing news require patience, accuracy, and careful checking of information. Sometimes the work may seem repetitive, but it is very important to ensure correct and reliable news. I learned how to review facts, write news content, collect photos and videos and also organize information properly. The newsroom environment was professional and supportive, and gained valuable real-world experience. Overall, The Daily Rupali Bangladesh was great place to learn, grow, and build a strong foundation for my future career in journalism.

Skills Developed During Internship program

Whereas Interning at the Daily Rupali Bangladesh, I picked up a number of profitable aptitudes. Following my internship at The Daily Rupali Bangladesh, I sharpened the following capacities:

- News Writing on any beat
- Creating news stories
- writing attractive headlines
- Good Voice-over delivery
- Arranging Field visits
- Selecting suitable words while writing
- Managing time effectively
- Building social connections

- Translational capacities
- Investigating and Compiling news data
- Inquiring about online information sources
- Improved my Vocabulary and Pronunciation
- I learned with PTC

The Opportunity of Future Career

My Internship experience has been extremely valuable for shaping my future goals, personal growth, and academic development. In today's competitive job market, every industry seeks skilled professionals, and gaining practical experience is essential for any fresh graduate starting their career. During my internship, I had the opportunity to acquire hands-on experience, expand my professional network, and deepen my understanding of the journalism industry. It also helped me improve my time management skills and develop several essential abilities required for online news reporting. Moreover, I was able to connect with many experienced professionals, which has been invaluable for my career journey.

Limitation of the Internship Program

During three-month internship at The Daily Rupali Bangladesh, I faced several challenges that helped me understand the real difference between academic learning and professional media work. As an intern and junior member of the newsroom, I could not learn everything in a short time. I worked as a temporary assistant, not as a full employee, so I had some limitation. Senior journalists were careful about sharing their confidential sources. Sometimes they could not answer all my questions because of professional rules and responsibilities. However, they treated me as a learner and guided me whenever possible. Even with these challenges, I learned how to handle things carefully, and how reporters work under pressure, observant, and prepared for a future career in journalism.

CHAPTER FIVE

CONCLUSION

SWOT Analysis of Daily Rupali Bangladesh Digital

Recommendation

I am grateful to have completed my three-month internship at Daily Rupali Bangladesh, a successful newspaper with over eleven years of experience. As a newsroom editor, I gained hands-on experience in news writing, headline writing, content reviewing, and voice-over delivery. This internship helped me improve my professional skills and understand real-time journalism. I believe extending the internship period from three to six months would allow students to gain deeper experience while staying fully focused on their work without academic pressure.

Conclusion

At this point, my internship with The Daily Rupali Bangladesh has been a truly rewarding experience. I faced both exciting and challenging moments, but what mattered most were the lessons I learned along the way. I was fortunate to work closely with many talented journalist who guided me as mentors, and I am sincerely grateful for their support and encouragement. I also appreciate my house for giving me the opportunity to gain practical experience at such a well-established and respected publication, which has strengthened my skills and confidence as a newsroom editor.
